Catharine Lorillard Wolfe, Daughter of John David Wolfe and Dorothea Ann Lorillard his Wife, was born in New York City, March 8th, 1828.

She died in this City, April 4th, 1887.

Miss Wolfe was descended from an old Lutheran family in Saxony, whence her great grandfather, John David Wolfe, came to this country before the year 1729. He died in 1759, leaving four children, of whom the eldest was David. David Wolfe lived till near the end of a long life of eighty-eight years in the old family residence on Fair, now Fulton Street, and this, with other city real estate has remained in the possession of the family to the present time. In the war of the revolution, David Wolfe and his brother Christopher served their country with credit. After the war David and his younger brother, John Albert, were partners as hardware merchants in this city, and about 1816 they were succeeded in business by Christopher, son of John Albert, and John David, son of David.

John David Wolfe, (born July 24, 1792), retired from active business in the prime of his life. Thereafter he devoted his large wealth and judicious labors to benevolent purposes, largely in the foundation and encouragement of educational, charitable and religious institutions. He was devoutly attached to the Episcopal church, was for some time vestryman of Trinity parish; afterward vestryman, and at the time of his death, senior warden of Grace church. His memory is perpetuated in many noble institutions, not only in his native city but in various and remote parts of the country. Some of these were foundations laid by himself alone, others by him in association with generous men who were imbued with like spirit. The gifts and noble works of these men have made the fame of the merchant princes of New York an enduring and priceless possession to their successors, their city and the world. Mr. Wolfe's charities were always without ostentation, and his private gifts were undoubtedly larger than those which were known. Churches and church foundations of benevolence and education in all parts of the country received his never failing aid. St. Johnland on Long Island, the Sheltering Arms in this city, the High School at Denver in Colorado, the Diocesan School at Topeka in Kansas, the Theological Seminary in Ohio, these and many other institutions bear witness to his munificent heart and hands. He was warmly attached to the New York Historical Society in whose important work and collections he was a free contributor of means and an active personal laborer. He was one of the founders of the American Museum of Natural History in this city, and was its first President when he died, May 17, 1872, in the eightieth year of his age, leaving but one child, Catharine Lorillard, surviving him, who succeeded to the large property.

Miss Wolfe was endowed with a mind of remarkable power, cultivated by education, reading and extended travel. Her biography cannot be written here. She devoted herself and her large and largely increasing wealth to the widest and most effective charity, governing herself in her gifts by careful examination and calm judgment, where personal investigation could be made, and where that was not possible, displaying her superior ability in the selection of sound and trustworthy advisers, on whom she relied with confidence. The catalogue of her specific charities would be much longer than this catalogue of her collection of paintings. Her catholic disposition in these may be gathered from the names of a few such objects of her larger appropriations, as Union College at Schenectady, St. Luke's Hospital in New York, the noble charities at St. Johnland on Long Island, the American Chapel at Rome in Italy, the Italian Mission in Mulberry Street, New York, the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Grace Church in New York City, to which she gave the chantry and other buildings, The Wolfe Expedition to Asia, the Home for Incurables at Fordham, the Diocesan House in Lafayette Place, New York—the list must stop abruptly. There is not space to enumerate half of her recorded gifts, in sums varying from twenty to two hundred thousand dollars. But those who should form an estimate of Miss Wolfe's benevolence from the mere magnitude and number of her gifts, would fail to appreciate her inner life and character. She was constant and unfailing in personal charities among those who were suffering. She visited the poor, and her presence always carried with it the atmosphere of purity and kindness in which she lived. She educated young girls; she had always large numbers of beneficiaries; she sought out opportunities to relieve the poor and those who were in trouble or sorrow. When she was absent in Europe she did not forget home benevolence. A friend tells of her sending to him in New York, from her boat on the Nile, $25,000 in a check, to be distributed in charities.

Nor did she, while devoting so much of her life to good works, fail in any degree to fulfill the duties of that position in the social world to which she was called by her wealth and her accomplishments. She recognized those duties, and performed them with grace and dignity as the accomplished hostess in her own house, and the always welcome guest in others. Those who knew her best admired and loved her most.

She had from early life cultivated her affection for the fine arts, and before her father's death had purchased several paintings which are in the present catalogue. Her taste was excellent, and her judgment strengthened by study and very thorough acquaintance with the works of old and modern artists. She had therefore, great enjoyment in gathering around her, in her city residence, examples of masters in the modern schools, a work which was continued steadily from year to year through her life, and in which she was happy in her reliance for advice and assistance on her kinsman John Wolfe, Esq., through whom most of her selections were made. Nevertheless she exercised a completely independent taste, which decided her, after thorough acquaintance with a painting, whether to retain or reject it. The collection which is here catalogued is therefore an absolute record of the educated and refined taste of the lady whose name it bears.

Miss Wolfe had a constant interest in the Metropolitan Museum of Art to whose collections she had been a large contributor, and of which she was one of the patrons. Her interest in Art History had been exhibited shortly before her death by her gift to the American School at Athens, and by her payment of the expenses of an expedition to Asia, for the purpose of exploration, with reference to future work of excavation among the buried remains of Ancient Art.

By her last will she disposed of more than a million dollars in money and objects of art, for the perpetuation of those works of Christian charity and centres of education of the people to which her father and herself had so wisely and faithfully contributed. Her gifts to the Museum of Art illustrate the judicious consideration which had characterized all her generosity. Taking into consideration, as few have ever done, the fact that in a museum without an endowment, dependent on its members for its current expenses, every new gift entails increased expense on the institution, she not only gave to the museum her collection of paintings, but added an endowment of $200,000, the income to be used for the preservation and increase of the collection.

The following is an extract from the section of her will, making these provisions:

"I give and bequeath to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, chartered by the State of New York and located in the City of New York, all articles of the following description which may belong to me at the time of my decease and be then situated or remaining in the City of New York, namely: my entire collection of modern oil paintings, with their frames, and also my water color drawings with their frames, which paintings include the original portrait of my late father, John David Wolfe, by Huntington, and my own portrait by Alexander Cabanel, all which works of art by this section of my will disposed of shall be properly selected, and scheduled by my executors, and shall thereafter and within six months after my decease be delivered by them to said Metropolitan Museum of Art as its own absolute property, and subject to its absolute disposal, but with the desire and hope on my part that the same may be had, held and exhibited by that institution for the enjoyment and recreation of all who may frequent its rooms, and also with a view to the education and cultivation of the public taste for the fine arts. This gift, however, is upon express condition that the trustees and managers of said institution shall provide and set apart exclusively for the said collection a suitable, well-lighted fire-proof apartment, gallery or separate space, where the paintings and water color drawings herein mentioned shall be properly arranged and displayed; and provided also, that said collection shall be designated and continue to be known as the "Catharine Lorillard Wolfe Collection." And in order to provide for the better preservation of the said paintings and drawings, and the future increase of said collection, I give and bequeath to my executors the sum of two hundred thousand dollars in money (or in stocks or securities deemed by them to be of that value) upon trust, to be held and kept invested in United States or State stocks or bonds in good credit, or other securities, strictly approved for the investment of trust funds, and to receive the interest or income thereof and apply the net amount of the same as it shall from time to time accrue to the use of the said Metropolitan Museum of Art during the lives of David Wolfe Bishop and Louie L. Lorillard, two of said executors, and the life of the survivor of them to the intent that such income shall be applied from time to time by said institution for such judicious repairs as may be necessary to the said works of art, and any surplus thereof to be expended for the purchase or acquisition of other original modern oil paintings, either by native or foreign artists, but only for works of acknowledged merit and superior excellence, both in subject and execution, in the departments of art known as figure, landscape and genre subjects, and which shall become additions to the original collection hereby bequeathed, and shall continue to be part of the collection designated and known as aforesaid."

28. KAULBACH, WILHELM.—Crusaders before Jerusalem. The intention of the artist was to express symbolically the idea that christianity has become the triumphant religion of the universe; in the middle and extreme distance can be seen the city of Jerusalem with its domes and palaces, the crusaders coveted goal; somewhat removed, some crusaders contemplate the city from a hill-top, a group of eminent knights, ecclesiastics, bishops and crusade preachers; on another hill to the right can be seen the army of crusaders commanded by Godfrey cf Bouillon, who holds uplifted in both hands, a crown, symbol of the divine right of the Kings of Jerusalem; near him are Boemond and Tancredi, soldiers who had distinguished themselves in the memorable battles the crusaders fought with the Saracens. The ground is covered with the enemy's dead. On the foreground in the middle, are Peter of Amiens on his knees, with eyes turned towards the Holy city and offering to God prayers of thanksgiving. Behind him a group of penitents lying on the ground or scourging themselves; above, borne on clouds, is seen the divine apparition of the Redeemer accompanied by the Holy Virgin and surrounded by the Saints and Martyrs. Godfrey of Bouillon bearing on his head a crown of thorns, offers the crown of the Holy Land to the Saviour, the real King of Jerusalem. Near Peter of Amiens is a group of fervent psalmists of the christian faith, followed by the Knights in magnificent armor. The Troubadour of the middle ages, so closely associated with the romances of the Crusaders, here also finds his place. The beautiful Armida, borne seated on a litter draped with laurel branches, is carried by Moors, while her Knight, Rinaldo, leads the way to the city, as pious, and beautiful, she lifts her gaze to the heavenly apparition.

81. BRETON, JULES.—Religious Procession in Brittany. Purchased in 1873 from the collection of the late Baron Strausberger, Berlin.

The Brittany peasantry are almost as wild as their country, excessively quaint in their costume, wearing broad-brimmed hats and flowing hair, and in some districts trunk hose of the 16th century: They are usually spare and wiry in their persons, are almost unchanged in their manners, customs and habits, and old legends and superstitions still retain their hold on the popular mind. Of ancient monuments of different ages there is no lack in Brittany, and above all of Celtic remains; those extraordinary masses of rough unhewn stones are supposed to be in some way connected with the religion of the Druids. Brittany appears to have been the sacred land of the Gauls, the centre of their worship to which the various nations and tribes repaired on pilgrimages at stated times to pay their devotions. Their mysterious influence is not yet by any means effaced from the minds of the lower orders of Brittany. The influence of paganism lingered long in these remote wilds, indeed the inhabitants of Ouessant are said to have been idolaters until within two hundred years. Hence has arisen a strange jumble of paganism and Romanism. Heathen divinities were replaced by saints, of which the number in Brittany exceeds that of any part of Romish Europe. Almost every church has its strange legend, and every saint his special patronage, and on his fête day a pilgrimage or pardon is celebrated, when indulgence for past sins is obtained. These pardons or festivals often are nearly equivalent to the German Kirchweich, the Flemish Kermes, and the Irish Wake. The pardon St. Mathurin held at Lamballe on Whit Sunday is much frequented by pilgrims, who dance the old Breton dances. The pardon celebrated four times a year at Rumegol near Le Faou is attended with very curious ceremonies. These pardons take place at fixed periods around about certain churches, but often in uncultivated fields, where tents are erected and where the fête continues for several days and is attended by thousands of the peasantry of both sexes The most important of these pardons are those of St. Anne d' Auray, and of St Anne de Palud, which last is the most picturesque of all, and takes place at the sea-side. The one represented in M. Breton's picture is held at Kergoat, near Douarnenez and Quimper.

They were to meet in the old Palace of Cairo, and these proud Mamelukes in gorgeous robes, and golden helmets shining in the sun, rode up the strange narrow street cut out of the solid rock, where in this narrow defile, conscienceless Mehemet laid his trap. When the brilliant procession arrived at the gate "El Azale," the soldiers cried "Treason" as they saw each house filled with Albanians armed with long guns. The Mamelukes surrounded by impassable walls, fell like ripe corn under a hail of bullets, a confused mass of men and beasts: the horses neighing in their fright bounded through pools of blood over the bodies of the wounded, while the conquerors of a hundred battles, now conquered, shook their clenched fists at the terrible walls. Death passed over them like a whirlwind, not sparing one out of the five hundred horsemen."

186. BONHEUR, MLLE. MARIE ROSA.—The Horse Fair.
197¼x93½. Presented by MR. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, 1887.

Mlle. Rosa Bonheur made her Début at the Paris Salon of 1841, to which she sent two small pictures of sheep, goats and rabbits. She exhibited each following year except 1851–52. In 1853 she exhibited her masterpiece, the now famous "Horse Fair." The subsequent history of this Painting is given in the following extract from a letter written to Mr. S. P. Avery by Mr. Ernest Gambart, the original purchaser of the picture, formerly of London, and now retired from business and living at Nice: "I will give you the real history of the 'Horse Fair' now in New York. It was painted in 1852 by Rosa Bonheur, then in her thirtieth year, and exhibited in the next Salon. Though much admired, it did not find a purchaser. It was soon after exhibited at Ghent, meeting again with much appreciation, but was not sold, as art did not flourish at the time. In 1855, the picture was sent by Mlle. Rosa Bonheur to her native town of Bordeaux and exhibited there. She offered to sell it to the town at the very low price of 12,000 francs ($2,400). While there I asked her if she would sell it to me and allow me to take it to England and have it engraved. She said; 'I wish my picture to remain in France. I will once more impress on my countrymen my wish to sell it to them for 12,000 francs. If they refuse, you can have it, but if you take it abroad you must pay me 40,000 francs.' The town failing to make the purchase I at once accepted these terms, and Rosa Bonheur then placed the picture at my disposal. I tendered her the 40,000 francs and she said: 'I am much gratified at your giving me such a noble price, but I do not like to feel that I have taken advantage of your liberality. Let us see how we can combine in the matter. You will not be able to have an engraving made from so large a canvas. Suppose I paint you a small one of the same subject, of which I will make you a present.' Of course I accepted the gift, and thus it happened that the large work went travelling over the kingdom on exhibition, while Thomas Landseer was making an engraving from the quarter-size replica.

"After some time, in 1857 (I think), I sold the original picture to Mr. Wm. P. Wright, New York (whose picture gallery and residence were at Weehauken, N. J.), for the sum of 30,000 francs, but as he claimed a share of the profits of its exhibition in New York and other cities, he really paid me only 22,000 francs for it. I offered to repurchase the picture in 1870 for 50,000 francs, but ultimately I understood that Mr. Stewart paid a much larger price for it on the dispersion of Mr. Wright's gallery. The quarter-size replica, from which the engraving was made, I finally sold to Mr. Jacob Bell, who bequeathed it, in 1859, to the nation, and it is now in the National Gallery in London. A second, still smaller replica, was painted a few years later, and was re-sold some time ago in London for £4,000 ($20,000). There is also a smaller water-color drawing, which was sold to Mr. Bolckow for 2,500 guineas ($12,000), and is now an heirloom belonging to the town of Middleborough. That is the whole history of this grand work. The Stewart canvas is the real and true original, and only large size 'Horse Fair.'

"Once in Mr. Stewart's possession, it never left his gallery until the auction sale of his collection, March 25, 1887, when it was purchased by Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt for the sum of $53,500, and presented to The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Hamerton calls Rosa Bonheur 'the most accomplished female painter who ever lived,' and adds: 'She is a pure and generous woman as well, and can hardly be too much admired, whether we regard her as woman or artist. She is simple in her tastes and habits of life, and many stories are told of her generosity to others.'"

206. PILOTY, CARL THEODOR VON.—Thusnelda at the Triumphal Entry of Germanicus into Rome.

Painted to order for the late A. T. Stewart, Esq. At the request of Emperor William, was exhibited in Berlin before being sent to this country. The large painting now in the Munich Gallery was painted subsequent to the above.

The following description is by the painter, Piloty:

The Emperor Tiberius, surrounded by his Courtiers (Favorites, Councillors, Lictors, Senators and Roman Women,) has taken his place upon a tribune under a spread canopy, in order that the triumphal procession of Germanicus may pass before him.

Germanicus appears in the background upon a triumphal car, accompanied by his five sons, surrounded by Trophies of Victory, and is greeted by the applause and acclamations of the people, who are to be seen at the Arch of Triumph.

In front of the car, reaching from the middle distance to the foreground of the picture, are the German Captives being led in chains. As principal figure of this group and of the picture, walks Thusnelda, in the costume of the Germans, with her son, Tumelicus (a child of three years), accompanied by a nurse and an attendant. Before her is the Priest, Libes coupled (chained) together with Warriors, escorted by Roman Soldiers, who insult them. Behind Thusnelda are to be seen her brothers, leaders of the Cherusker, chained together, with bears, etc., etc. The foreground to the left is occupied by populace of Rome, who mock and insult Thusnelda.

Thusnelda, having been forcibly carried away from her husband, Arminius a German Prince, by her father Segestes, was, from reasons which appeared to him advantageous for his own personal interests and the condition of the Germans, betrayed and delivered into the hands of the Romans.

In the picture, Tiberius has selected Segestes to stand before the steps of his throne and has forced him to witness the shame of his own daughter; he is mocked by the Senators sitting near him, they point to the prisoners below.

Strabo describes, as an eye-witness, this event; he, as well as Tacitus, although Romans, express plainly their sympathy for the devotion and love of country exhibited by Thusnelda, whose personality will ever be a poetical subject for an artist.

212. Schrader, Julius.—Baron Alexander von Humboldt. Painted from life at the age of 89 years. 52x62½.

In the year 1857, the late Mr. Albert Havemeyer, of this city, being then in Berlin, called on Baron von Humboldt and requested him to sit to the eminent artist, Julius Schrader, for his portrait. The Baron was obliged to decline the frequent and urgent solicitations of his many admirers for a similar favor, but having in the United States many personal friends and acquaintances whom he thought would be gratified to see a good portrait of himself, cheerfully consented to sit; and taking from his table a number of sketches made by himself, he selected one having in the background Chimborazo, and said, "I will be painted sitting here," designating the spot with Chimborazo in the distance. The artist commenced the picture at once, and at its completion the Baron expressed himself as delighted with it. This was the last portrait, from life, of Humboldt.

LETTER FROM THE ARTIST TO MR. A. T. STEWART.

MY DEAR MR. STEWART :

I have delayed writing you because my letter must be a last adieu to a work of many years—an act of final separation. You will comprehend why I wished to do so only at the last moment; as, however great may be my satisfaction to know you are to be its possessor, I can only part with it with pain—a picture which has been for so long a time the life and joy of my studio.

Le voila, that which will be soon in your possession, be good enough to receive as a friend; not as one that pleases at the first contact, and is then soon forgotten, but as one of those who, by intimate acquaintance, is loved more and more. Permit me to believe that when you are looking at this picture—on which I have bestowed all the science and experience I have been able to acquire in my art—your pleasure will constantly grow greater.

I have the conviction—which I do not express without a certain pride—that the value of this work will increase with time. What may or can be said of it will pass away, but the picture will remain, to be an honor to both of us; and although it can defend itself, yet, among the thousands of persons who have hastened to see it, many have done it injustice with a certain malevolent appreciation—still I have the right, having painted it with so much sincerity of purpose, to defend and explain it. Strange as this may appear, it must be done; because, however singular may be the fact, some, I understand, have not been pleased to go and see for themselves, but have adopted the unfair judgment of others.

I did not intend to paint a Battle—I wanted to paint Napoleon at the zenith of his glory; I wanted to paint the love, the adoration of the soldiers for the great Captain in whom they had faith, and for whom they were ready to die.

I previously had represented, in the picture "1814," the heart-rending end of the Imperial Dream—those men, only recently intoxicated with glory, now shown exhausted and no longer believing in their invincible chief. My palette then did not have colors sad enough for the purpose; but to-day, in "Friedland, 1807," wishing everything to appear brilliant at this triumphant moment, it seemed to me I was unable to find colors sufficiently dazzling. No shade should be upon the Imperial face, to take from him the epic character I wished to give him. The battle, already commenced, was necessary to add to the enthusiasm of the soldiers, and make the subject stand forth, but not to diminish it by saddening details. All such shadows I avoided, and presented nothing but a dismounted cannon and some growing wheat which would never ripen.

This was enough.

The men and the Emperor are in the presence of each other. The soldiers cry to him that they are his, and the impressive Chief, whose Imperial will directs the masses that move around, salutes his devoted army. He and they plainly comprehend each other, and absolute confidence is expressed in every face.

Such was the idea as it leaped from my brain the first instant when I embodied the picture in thought; and which, in spite of the long time I have taken to put it on canvas, has always remained with me so clear and plain that I have never in any manner modified it.

As to the execution, only a painter (and one of great experience) can say what time, labor and patience have been brought to bear upon this work to produce a single whole out of so many diverse elements. Only he can say how difficult it is, from such varied materials, to put aside all these artifices which so often are used in art to cover defects. The growing wheat is even proof of the difficulties I have encountered in covering it with the dust which hides so many things.

I said to you at the beginning, and again let me repeat it, that I have faith in my work. Time will consolidate and strengthen it more and more, and I am almost certain your enlightened love for art will protect it, in case there should be need.

Now, dear sir, let me close by offering you my portrait. You desire to have one, and I have had the pleasure of painting it for you myself. With it I trust you will speak of me more intimately, and will always be enabled to recall how much I am,

Your devoted,

Poissy, January 27, 1876. E. MEISSONIER.

Hither he was pursued by Sciarra Colonna, at that time head of the most celebrated and powerful of the Roman aristocratic families. The picture represents the moment when Boniface says to his assailants, "Here is my neck; here is my head; strike! but I will die Pope." PARIS, May 29, 1879.

MR. HENRY HILTON:

MY DEAR SIR—I have learned with great pleasure that you have become the purchaser of my painting, exhibited this year in our Art Salon, and I am happy that it finds a place in your gallery, which enjoys a very great reputation in France. I know that I shall be "in good company" with you, and it is so much the more gratifying to me, as I consider this last painting the most important work I have ever produced.

The episode which I have chosen gives scope for a great development of subject. It is the moment when the division of General Faron (now Inspector of Marine), after having taken Champigny, situated above the Marne, fortified itself in the village and defended, foot by foot, the houses and enclosures against the return attack of the Saxony and Wurtemburg divisions, in the battle of 2d December, 1870. The chateau which I have shown is one of those which is found at the fork of the two roads of Chennevières—a place well known to those Parisians who took part in the scenes of the siege of Paris. The officer shown in the centre of the picture is General Faron, who was appointed General of Division on the field of battle.

The foot soldiers belong to the 113th Regiment of the Line, who lost a great number in the three days of fight. The Sappers, who are making the embrasures in the wall to allow the sharpshooters to fire under protection, and are barricading the opening with all kinds of material; the artillerists, who are placing the battery guns in position; all likewise were under the orders of General Faron, who at this time commanded the right wing of the French army.

I have endeavored to portray, in the most exact manner possible, the various scenes of which I was a witness, having been myself a soldier in the "Garde Mobile" during the siege of Paris; and in painting this work I have had the advantage of being able to reproduce some souvenirs absolutely personal. I attach, therefore, much importance to this painting, and am specially desirous—outside of the Paris Exhibition—for permission to exhibit it in Germany, where I have been very particularly solicited to show my military works.

I particularly desire to be represented at this international gathering, and I have selected naturally this my most important work. It is the first time since the war of 1870 that French art has been exhibited in Germany, and the presence of military paintings recalling souvenirs of the late war will add a peculiar piquancy.

I have always been very sensible of the favors shown me in America, and I am happy to be able to testify this to you especially.

Receive, sir, the expression of my distinguished regards, etc.

ÉDOUARD DÉTAILLE.

Justinian I. (Flavius Anicius Justinianus) surnamed the great, a Byzantine Emperor, born at Tauresium, a village near Sardica (now Sophia) in Bulgaria, in 482, or 483 ; died, 565. He was the son of a poor barbarian family, but his elevation was promoted by his uncle Justin I. who, shortly before his death in 527, adopted him as Co-Emperor. The political event of his reign may be summed up in the wars of Belisarius and the eunuch Narses, who obtained successes over the Persians in the East, and the Vandals and Goths in Italy, and in the terrible sedition which broke out at Constantinople in 532. The glory of his reign is the famous digest of Roman law, known generally as the Justinian Code, which was compiled out of the Gregorian, Theodosian, Hermogenian codes, by the ablest lawyers of the empire, under the genius of the juris-consult, Tribonian. Their labors consist—I. of the "Statute Law," or Justinian Code, properly so called. II. "The Pandects," a digest of the decisions and opinions of former magistrates and lawyers—these two compilations consisted of matter that lay scattered through more than two thousand volumes, now reduced to fifty. III. "The Institutes," an abridgment in four books, containing the substance of all the laws in elementary form. IV. The laws of modern date, including Justinian's own edicts, collected into one volume, and called "The New Code." These labors which a Cæsar had not been able to accomplish, were completed by the year 541. Besides this important work of imperial reform, Justinian was a great builder and engineer, and works of public utility were kept constantly in progress in all parts of the empire. He was remarkable for his temperance and chastity, and not less for his great learning and diligent application to business.
